To discuss the forms of advertising media appearances by Kosovo businesses, you should first start from the adjustment of enterprises to market economy conditions. In Kosovo after 1999, the transition process is conducted in specific circumstances. First of all, Kosovo was devastated by the war and was far in trends development of many countries in the region and beyond. Kosovo businesses are faced with a lack of experience in foreign markets, low levels of managerial development, lack of capital, not good credit conditions for businesses with particular emphasis on high interest rates, then the lack of information, weak institutional support, lack of a strategy for developing small and medium enterprises which is ongoing challenge for businesses to keep you fit in a such a complex environment. All these factors contributed to Kosovo businesses have a low level of development of marketing and promotional activities. Furthermore, some important state enterprises, such as KEK, began their function without proper management, taking foreign aid and donations to permanent capital infusions from the state. In all this we must not forget the remembrance of the lack of local competence in managing them. Major economic enterprises were managed by UNMIK which proved to be quite unsuccessful in their management.

Keywords: Kosovo, advertising, media

Market forces are more effective when the number of participants is large and when market principles are recognized and properly used by all participants. However, market movements are like tides and reflux of the sea. They come and go. The more the market develops, the stronger will become them. We can see these waves in economies where service activities are the driving forces developed in the economy. The only things that exist in the world of marketing are perceptions of the potential customer. The reality is how people perceive, things independently. Many people think that marketing is warfare products and over time the best product will win. Those involved in marketing most of the time are concerned with research and gathering evidence. The truth is relative, everyone sees the truth differently from another. When you say I'm right and the other person is wrong but claims that the estimates be something better than anyone else. They are often worn with a sense of infallibility. The way we perceive things makes them think they are always more accurate than those that surround them. The truth and the way they conceive of this truth is mixed in mind making it difficult distinguishing between them.

To change the conviction of a potential client is something else. Minds of consumers are very difficult to change. Just having a little experience with a product category, the buyer thinks he's right. Universal Truth is the perception that he has in mind.
